

PAINTER

Nancy Muldowney . . . an artist with a flair for interpreting the natural environment in various mediums on paper, canvas and fabric. Equally at home with transparent watercolor, acrylic and the printmaking process, she will use a brush, a stick of pastel, a technical pen, or a brayer to achieve the right effects. Familiar landmarks or intimate views of flora and fauna are her favorite subject matter.

Continuously looking for new methods to create interesting effects, she experiments in collaging with rice paper adding various paint mediums to achieve unique effects. Common elements such as starch or salt to make different kinds of textures become vehicles for experimentation. Various tools become her painting or drawing instruments.

"Sometimes even crumpled paper makes just the right marks!"

"Every painting or print I do starts with a little seed of excitement for the subject or idea. From there, I envision the image I wish to create and then jump right into the painting, doing backgrounds and simple images. Sometimes the end results are what I have envisioned and sometimes I let the work tell me how to proceed."

PRINTMAKER

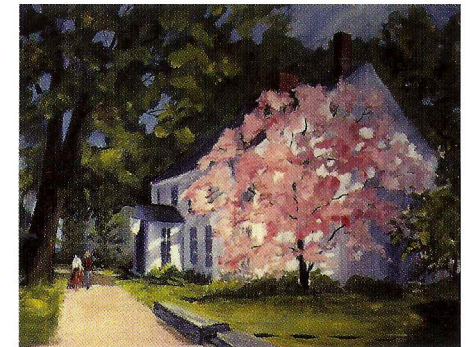

"There are always new ways to test my skills. I seldom say, 'I can't do that'. Even though it may take several tries and many unresolved paintings, I am always ready to keep experimenting. That is the only way I continuously keep myself involved and excited about what I'm doing. It always has to be a challenge."

FRAMER / MURALIST

A relatively new venue are large landscape murals for outlet malls in Darien, Georgia; Gaffney, South Carolina and Lebanon, Tennessee.

"It was exciting to do them and I think of them as an open air museum available to people who may never go inside a museum or art gallery."

A book cover illustration and participation in another book are her ventures into the publishing side of art.
